OREMUS.

BY G. H. BAKER.

We will not raise, 9 God, the formal prayer Of broken heart and shattered nerve; Thou know'st our griefs, our wants, and whatsoo'r Is best for those who serve.

Before Thy feet in silence and in awe, We open lay our case and creed; As brave men may, the patriot sweed we draw, But Thmo must be the deed.

We have no pageantry, to please Thy eyes Save marshaled men, who marching come Beneath thy gaze in armed panoply; No music save the drum.

We have no altar builded in Thy sight. From which the fragrant offerings ris Save this wide field of hot and bloody fight; These dead our sacrifice.

To this great eause the force of prayer is given, The wordless prayer of righteous will : Before whose strength the ivory gates of heaven Fall open and are still.

For we believe, within our ismost souls, That what men do with spirit sad, To Thee in one vast cloud of worship rolls,-Rolls up, and makes Thee glad.

O God, if reason may presume so far, We say our cause is also Thine; We read its truth in every flashing star; In every sacred line.

For Thy commissioned freedom first was sent To hold the tyrant's force at bay; The chain that broke in Egypt, was not meant To bind our shining day.

Preedom to all! in Thy great name we cry, And lift to Heaven Thy bloody sword; Too long have we been blind in heart and eyo To Thy outspoken word.

Before the terrors of that buttle call,

As flax before the gusty flame, Down, down, the vanquished enemy shall fail, Stricken with endless shame! Here let division cease. Join hand with hand, Join voice with voice; a general shout

And purge the traitors out! Fear not or faint not. God, who ruleth men. Marks where his noble martyrs lie;

They shall all rise beneath His smile again, His foes alone shall die.
